Editor's Corner

As the new editor of the CPSA "Bulletin", I am pleased to thank my predecessor, Allan Tupper, for his excellent work during the three years he served in that capacity.

As an information bulletin dealing with contemporary aspects of political study, the "Bulletin" should provide its readers with comprehensive information on the current topics of study, published or soon-to-be-published works, forthcoming symposia, research grants and other relevant points of interest. In this connection, I would be grateful if you could provide me with any relevant information.

Moreover, if you have any suggestions for both further changes to the existing format of the "Bulletin", I would be glad to receive your comments.

I am proposing to slightly restructure the past format by including brief scholarly contributions, notes on current debates pertaining to the discipline, recent institutional developments, new programs of study, all of which are of interest to our members.

With thanks in advance for making this effort a success.

Le mot du rédacteur

À titre de nouveau rédacteur pour le Bulletin, je me dois de remercier mon prédécesseur Allan Tupper, pour l'excellente besogne qu'il a réalisée au cours de son triennat.

Comme vous le savez, le Bulletin se veut un outil d'information portant sur les principaux aspects de la science politique et, comme tel, doit offrir à ses lecteurs des informations aussi exhaustives que possible sur les travaux récemment publiés (ou à paraître), les symposia, les projets de recherche, les offres d'emploi, ainsi que sur d'autres aspects touchant notre discipline. Pour cette raison, je vous serais reconnaissant de m'envoyer toutes informations qui pourraient y être pertinentes. De plus, si vous avez des suggestions à me faire concernant des changements éventuels à la facture actuelle du Bulletin, je vous saurai gré de m'en faire part. J'ai réarrangé quelque peu le format du Bulletin, j'espère qu'il vous plaira. J'aimerais inclure davantage de notes critiques, de textes courts portant sur les débats touchant l'avenir des sciences politiques en tant discipline, des informations sur les développements institutionnels ou sur les nouveaux programmes d'études. Tous ces aspects représentent un intérêt certain pour nos membres.

Merci de votre collaboration.

1. OUR NEWSLETTER

"The Bulletin" has a new Editor, Professor Alain Gagnon of Carleton University, Alain has accepted appointment for the usual three-year term: 1986-1989. He has been an active participant in Association life over the years and we look to an interesting period for our newsletter, the main vehicle of in-house communications in our political science community. We wish Alain good luck and know that you will be interested to see the changes in design and content that a new editorship always brings.

We take this opportunity, as well, to thank Professor Allan Tupper (Alberta) for his distinguished three years as Editor. He took in hand a publication that had fallen into "rudderless" times, gave it a regularity of publication, both in format and in dates, that it had lost and built up an excellent network of contacts across the nation so that interesting information flowed well and on time. Alain will have the proverbial "hard act to follow"!

2. 1986 ANNUAL CONFERENCE

351 persons registered at our Annual Meetings at the University of Manitoba. There were 374 participating in the Programme, amongst whom fully 182 were paper-givers. It was a remarkable conference by any measure and the persons attending were very pleased. Our thanks and congratulations go out to Don Carmichael and his Programme Committee and to Davis Daycock, the local organizer, as well as to The Department of Political Science at the University of Manitoba.

3. 1986 ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

Two major decisions were taken at the 1986 AGM: amendments to our Association were approved and membership fees were increased.

The Constitutional amendments were as presented in our last "Bulletin". As you will recall, their trust was to update the document in terms of bringing it into line with evolved practice. The role of the Secretary-Treasurer-Elect was, for example, seen as quite impossible to manage in practical terms and was, therefore, abolished.

"Inclusive" language was also introduced, to give clear expression to Association attitudes.

As you will know, our Association has been for some time on a financial path from precarious to grave. The AGM agreed with a carefully proposed brought forward by the Board of Directors and gave solid support to the raising of membership fees. For 1987 they will be:

</tr>
<tr>
<td>All other members</td>
<td>$75*</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

* These fees include $5, which is not joint revenue but which belongs to the SqSp only for its publication "POLITIQUE."

We all, I know, share the strong sense of the difficulty of these times. We must also be very frank in facing up to the fact that the effectiveness of efforts to defend our mutual interests rests very heavily on the numbers of political scientists whom we can claim to represent. A strong, energetic and united front is in the best interests of all. Your membership dollars are both a demonstration of that solidarity and the enabling means.

4. La réunion du Comité exécutif de l'Association internationale de science politique et la table ronde de l'AISP sur la crise de la pensée politique

Notre Association et la Société québécoise de science politique furent les hôtes de l'Association internationale de science politique en septembre à Ottawa. Nous avons accueilli le comité exécutif de l'AISP et nous avons patronné le colloque sur la crise de la pensée politique. Les membres de l'Association internationale ont été semblable à nous, il nous a été satisfaisant de notre hospitalité.

5. NEW INITIATIVES

Our Association has a new standing committee: The Scholarly Publications Committee. Proposed by the Managing Editor of our Journal, John McManamy, the Committee chaired by Professor Duff Spafford (Saskatchewan), who will be joined by Professor Guy-Antoine Lafleur (Laval), representing the Société, Board member and Professor Douglas G. Long (UWO), Professor Jon Pammett (Carleton), and Managing Editor, Professor John McManamy (WLU) will advise the Board on steps to be taken to improve scientific communications for our members.

Professor Kenneth D. McRae of Carleton University has been asked to undertake a study of research done by Canadian political scientists. To estimate political science research in this country we usually have to rely on the number of grants given by the SSHRC to political scientists. We feel that this does not give us an accurate picture of our collective research effort.
La Fédération mène présentement une bataille pour préserver son Programme d’aide à l’édition savante. Nous l’appuyons dans cette démarche et tentons de l’aider. Elle fait face elle aussi à une situation financière difficile et elle devra prochainement augmenter les frais d’adhésion, ce qui aura la conséquence malheureuse que vous devrez pour nos membres.

Aid to scholarly publications

As you are perhaps already aware, the future of the Aid to Scholarly Publications Programme is at stake. Over the past few months, increasing pressure has been put on the Social Science Federation of Canada and the Canadian Federation for the Humanities, which jointly administer the ASPs. This pressure, coming from both SSHRC and the Secretary of State, aims to impose radical cuts on the administrative budget of the Programme. The Federations certainly agree that administrative costs of the Programme must be as economical and efficient as possible. However, we are equally convinced that the level of services offered presently by the Programme must be maintained.

The situation is as follows: the Aid to Scholarly Publications Programme receives 400-500 applications and/or enquiriers a year, of which 300 fit into the eligibility criteria and go through the peer review process. Of these 300, approximately 150 receive small publication grants (the maximum grant is presently $8,000). This whole review process is controlled by two committees of 60 plus academics, nominated by the learned societies, in all the social sciences and humanities disciplines.

However, the Programme does much more than just award grants. During the more than 45 years of its existence, the Programme has developed a unique expertise in the field of scholarly publishing. The small secretariat in Ottawa which coordinates these activities has been progressively more involved in enterprises far beyond the awarding of grants. Programme officers spend much time in:

- consulting with authors and publishers in order to improve the quality of the manuscript;
- the organization of workshops and seminars on scholarly publishing (particular during the Learned Societies Conferences);
- the compilation and updating of a statistical data base on scholarly publishing in Canada;
- researching and monitoring activities on the scholarly publishing industry and on government policy in this area;
- the organization of national conferences, such as the recent Symposium "Publishing and Innovation", March 1986, Ottawa.

Programme d’aide à l’édition savante

Comme vous le savez peut-être, l’avenir du Programme d’aide à l’édition savante est en jeu. Depuis quelques mois, les pressions exercées sur la Fédération des sciences sociales et sur la Fédération des études humaines, qui administrent conjointement le Programme, sont accentuées. De la part du C.R.S.H.C. comme du Secrétariat d’État, ces pressions viennent à couper radicalement les frais d’administration du Programme. Bien que les Fédérations soient entièrement d’accord pour rendre l’administration du Programme plus efficace et plus économique possible, elles sont également convaincues que l’ensemble des services présentement dispensés par le Programme doivent être maintenus.

En bref, voici comment se présente le problème: le Programme d’aide à l’édition savante reçoit 400-500 soumissions et/ou demandes de renseignements par an. De ce nombre, environ trois cents manuscrits sont évalués, dans toutes les disciplines des sciences sociales et des humanités de ce dernier nombre, environ cent-cinquante reçoivent des subventions à la publication; ces subventions ont la particularité d’être très modestes (le montant maximum est maintenant de 8000$), mais de n’être accordées qu’après évaluation de chacun des manuscrits par des pairs. L’ensemble du processus d’évaluation est contrôlé par un Comité composé d’une soixantaine d’universitaires, choisis par les sociétés savantes, dans toutes les disciplines des sciences humaines.

Le Programme fait beaucoup plus que donner des subventions, cependant. Au cours de ses quelque quarante-cinq années d’existence, le programme a développé une expertise unique dans le domaine de l’édition savante, et le petit secrétariat qui assure la coordination des activités, à Ottawa, s’est progressivement engagé dans des activités annexes à l’attribution des subventions. Ainsi, outre l’évaluation des manuscrits, les agents du Programme consacrent beaucoup de temps à:

- la consultation avec les auteurs et les éditeurs, en vue d’améliorer la qualité des manuscrits;
- l’organisation d’ateliers et de colloques sur l’édition savante (en particulier lors du Congrès des sociétés savantes);
- la compilation et la mise à jour d’une base de données statistiques sur l’édition savante au Canada;
- les activités de recherche et de "monitoring" sur l’industrie du livre.
These various services are offered by the Programme's staff at a cost which certain government observers, ill-informed of the scope of the services furnished by the Programme, have judged excessive. So it is that the authors of the Nielsen Report (Culture and Communication) which deals, as we all know, with possible reductions in government expenses, estimate that the administrative costs of the Programme are too high. They hypothesis that the possibility be studied of SSHRC administering the Programme which, according to the report's authors, would be both more efficient and economical.

Following publication of the Nielsen Report, Council has put great pressure on the Federations to reduce drastically the administrative costs of the Programme if we (SSTC and CFH) wish to continue its administration. The preliminary indications that we have at this stage lead us to believe that SSHRC wishes to see administrative costs cut in half. At the present time, the Programme spends approximately 28% of its total budget of $1.2 million on the gamut of services mentioned above. This proportion may seem high but it must be borne in mind that, on the one hand, it covers much more than simple evaluation costs and, on the other hand, the proportion of administrative costs is inversely related to the size of the grant awarded: thus, it costs as much to review a manuscript which will eventually receive a $5,000 grant as it does to evaluate a $100,000 project. Any comparison of administrative costs among different programmes can therefore only be unrealistic and artificial.

Aware of the political realities faced by both SSHRC and government departments (particularly Secretary of State), the Federations are examining the possibility of responding to the pressures and vielled threats of the last few months in the following manner:

- on one hand, the administrative costs of the present Programme will be reduced significantly, by limiting services to manuscript review and assistance to authors only;
- on the other hand, the Federations will create a new programme of activities relating to research communication. This new programme will include those services cut out of the ASPP, as well as other activities relating to research communication. SSHRC will be invited to subsidize this new programme, into which the Federations will also invest their own resources.

We believe that, in this way, we will be able to respond to political pressure to reduce the administrative costs of the ASPP while, at the same time, maintain and even improve the whole range of services within the new, clearly defined programme: services which are so important for the development of scholarly publishing in Canada.

The Federations have prepared a document for submission to SSHRC detailing the two programmes (the Aid to Scholarly Publications Programme in its "reduced" version, and the new Programme).

savant et sur les politiques gouvernementales dans ce domaine;
- l'organisation de conférences nationales, telles le récent Symposium sur l'édition et l'innovation, en mars 1986, à Ottawa.

Ces divers services offerts par le personnel du Programme à des coûts que certains observateurs gouvernementaux - mal informés de la gamme des services rendus par le Programme - ont jugé excessifs. Ainsi, les auteurs du Rapport Nielsen (Communications et Culture) qui porte comme chacun sait sur les possibilités de réduction des dépenses gouvernementales, estiment que les coûts d'administration du Programme sont trop élevés; ils suggèrent que l'on étudie la possibilité que le Conseil de recherches en sciences humaines administre le Programme, ce qui, selon les auteurs du rapport, serait plus efficace et plus économique.

Suite à la publication du rapport Nielsen, les Fédérations ont été soumises à de vigoureuses pressions, de la part du CRSHC, pour qu'elles réduisent de manière draconienne les coûts administratifs du Programme, si elles voulaient continuer à l'administrer. Les indications préliminaires que nous avons, à ce stade, laissent penser que le CRSHC voudrait voir une réduction des coûts d'administration de moitié environ. À l'heure actuelle, le Programme consacre environ 28% de son budget total de 1.2 millions de dollars à l'ensemble des services énumérés ci-dessus. La proportion peut paraître élevée, mais il convient de se rappeler qu'il s'agit de beaucoup plus que de simples frais d'évaluation, d'une part, et que d'autre part, la proportion des coûts administratifs est, en général, inversement liée à la dimension des subventions accordées: il en coûte autant pour faire évaluer un manuscrit auquel on accordera finalement une subvention de quelque 5000 $ que pour faire évaluer un projet de recherche de 100,000 $. Il n'est donc pas possible de procéder, sinon de façon très artificielle, à des comparaisons de coûts administratifs.

Toujours est-il que les Fédérations, conscientes des réalités politiques auxquelles elles font face le CRSHC aussi bien qu'au ministères fédéraux (en particulier le Secrétariat d'État), étudient la possibilité de répondre aux pressions et aux menaces plus ou moins voilées auxquelles elles sont soumises depuis quelque temps de la façon suivante:

- d'une part, elles réduiraient de façon significative les coûts administratifs du Programme actuel, en limitant les services offerts à l'évaluation des manuscrits et aux services d'aide aux auteurs;
- d'autre part, les Fédérations créeront un nouveau programme d'activités reliés au domaine de la communication de la recherche. Seront regroupés dans le cadre de ce nouveau programme les services auront été supprimés du Programme d'aide à l'édition savante, ainsi que d'autres activités portant sur la communication de la recherche. Le CRSHC sera invité à subventionner ce nouveau programme, dans lequel les Fédérations investiront également de leurs ressources propres.

Nous croyons que, de cette façon, nous pourrons à la fois répondre à la pression politique pour réduire les coûts d'administration du Programme d'aide à l'édition savante, tout en maintenant, et même en améliorant, dans le cadre d'un nouveau programme, claire-
The Federal Matching Grants Policy

The proposed matching grants policy for the granting Councils was published by the government in July. These new guidelines were presented for consultation with the aim of bringing out a definitive policy in October.

First the good news: once one gets by the bureaucrats of the Ministry of Finance, it is astonishing to discover how simple and flexible the rules are. Following upon the Federation's recommendation, the rules provide for very broad definitions of the 'private sector' (including crown corporations and non-profit organizations) and the eligibility of money and in-kind contributions given directly to either the universities or the granting councils; as well as an evaluation process limited in most cases to certification of the eligibility of both contributor and activity.

The social sciences have, however, lost out, so far, on a critical point: social research will still not be counted for the purposes of tax incentives. As things stand now, private sector contributions to research in the human sciences are not eligible for tax credit, whereas contributions given to all other areas of scientific research are. This discriminatory treatment of the human sciences is totally unacceptable particularly since it implies that social scientists will be seriously hampered in their efforts to attract private sector funding at the level the government expects over the next five years.

The SSFC is concentrating its energies on persuading decision-makers to rethink this policy. In addition, we are working on a method to make human science R&D eligible for tax incentives within the matching grants scheme.

The Federation is also focusing on

(i) the eligibility within the definition of 'private sector' of school boards, municipal governments and international organizations such as the U.N., and

(ii) the necessity for the granting councils to define at the outset what incentives will be offered to universities and researchers.

The Facts is published by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, 31 Florence St., Ottawa K2P 0W6. This important publication is available, free of charge, upon request from CUPE. It provides good commentary and research on public affairs in a highly readable form. Special issues (like the recent response to the Macdonald Commission) are well suited for classroom use.

La politique d'appariement

En juillet dernier, le gouvernement fédéral soumettait à la consultation les règles de mise en œuvre de la politique d'appariement en vue du financement de ses agences subventionnaires.

D'abord les bonnes nouvelles: quiconque réussit à voir claire à travers le jargon propre au ministère des Finances découvre que les règles proposées sont étonnamment simples et souples. C'est que le recommandait la Fédération, les règles prévoient une définition large du secteur privé (sociétés de la couronne, organismes sans but lucratif), l'admissibilité des contributions versées aux universités et aux agences subventionnaires, l'admissibilité des contributions en nature, et un processus d'évaluation limité le plus souvent à la certification de l'admissibilité du contribuable et de l'activité.

Cependant, les sciences humaines n'ont pas eu gain de cause sur une question décisive: le traitement fiscal des contributions privées au titre de la recherche et du développement. Dans l'état actuel des choses, les contributions du secteur privé à la recherche en sciences humaines ne sont pas admissibles au crédit d'impôt, alors que les contributions dans tous les autres domaines scientifiques le sont. Ce traitement discriminatoire est inadmissible, d'autant plus que cela hypothèque sérieusement la capacité des sciences humaines à attirer les fonds prévus par le gouvernement aux cours des cinq prochaines années.

La Fédération a donc concentré ses énergies à faire valoir l'importance de cette question auprès des décideurs. Elle s'apprête également à proposer un moyen de rendre les sciences humaines admissibles au traitement fiscal pour la R&D dans le cadre de la politique d'appariement.

Les règles définitives de mise en œuvre de la politique seront rendues publiques au mois de novembre. Outre la question du traitement fiscal de la recherche en sciences humaines, on pourra alors juger de l'impact de nos représentations concernant l'inclusion, dans la définition du secteur privé, des commissions scolaires, des gouvernements municipaux et des agences internationales telles que les Nations unies, ainsi que sur la nécessité pour les trois conseils de préciser dès le début la nature et l'ampleur des incitations offertes aux universités et aux chercheurs.

Doctoral Education for Public Policy and Public Administration:
The Carleton Integrated Stream

G. Bruce Doern
School of Public Administration
Carleton University

In the past 15 years the focus of educational change in the field of public administration and public policy has been at the Masters level. This article outlines the rationale for, and the main features of, a major initiative at the Doctoral level, the Carleton University Integrated Ph.D., offered jointly by the Department of Political Science and the School of Public Administration. This development of the administration Ph.D. level is a product of evolving changes at the Masters level as well as of changes in both the nature and scope of research.

As a field of graduate study and research, the study of public administration first crystallized at the Masters level. In the 1950s and 1960s public administration was essentially a part of political science departments, even where, as at Carleton, a separate School existed since 1955. The intellectual concerns were focussed on general but vital issues such as the political accountability and power of bureaucracies, administrative law and discretion, and the normative responsibility of public officials. These issues were examined in both the Canadian context and in comparison with other countries (especially western countries, but later also developing countries as well.) Where managerial issues were examined, they tended to be at a general level such as on the issues of merit in personnel systems and legislative scrutiny and control of spending. The foundations of the study of public administration in Canada, centred in the work of scholars such as Ted Hodgetts and Don Rowat, were firmly established and are a permanent legacy as are the inherent normative and democratic concerns they stressed.

In the 1970s, public administration and public policy were increasingly grouped together. At the Masters level they were intellectually joined in various ways in new or reorganized graduate schools at Carleton, Queen’s, Dalhousie, Victoria and Ecole d’administration publique. These initiatives reflected three broad influences on both research and teaching in this field. These were: the introduction of more detailed concerns about management; the influence of academic disciplines such as economics as well as changes within the discipline of political science; and the consequent study of several public policy fields such as economic, social, energy and health care policy. These influences, of course did not emerge only out of intellectual inquiry. They also reflected changes in society, not the least of which was the growth of government and the state.

Managerial concerns included a basic understanding of accountability, financial management and organizational behaviour but they also embraced such important areas as public sector collective bargaining. In the economics discipline the application of economic theory to non-market decision-making led to extensive research on policy and bureaucracies under the broad rubric of “public choice” theory. Key books by economists have become increasingly required reading for doctoral study in political science programs. All of this led to a substantial increase in the nature of analytical content in both policy and management.

Within political science, the rebirth of political economy, including the importance of broader interpretations of the role and structure of the modern state and detailed studies of federalism, has rubbed shoulders with the broadening work being done on bureaucracies in public administration, including the extensive study of particular departments and agencies and their place, not only in the overall policy making process but also in relation to their clientele interests.

A further vital feature of this work was that it helped to crystallize different ideological and analytical interpretations about such vital areas as macro economic policy and economic management. The role of Keynesian policy, monetarism and incomes policy received as a result, a healthier and more contentious range of interpretations across discipline boundaries than had existed within economics.

This development within political science departments has led to the establishment of Masters degree programs in policy at various universities including Manitoba, Concordia, and Guelph-McMaster. It also meant that it was more difficult to identify who precisely were the faculty to be labelled as being “in the field” of public policy and public administration. For some scholars these developments were seen as evidence of the “decline” of public administration within political science departments. For others, including myself, they reflected a broadening of public administration and political science as a discipline (since political scientists were members of both schools and departments) and in an even larger interdisciplinary sense. At the masters level, these influences both broadened the curriculum (to deal with many policy fields and to understand the larger political economy) and added specific knowledge needs to it (to deal with and understand modern financial and personnel systems.)

While the broader developments significantly influenced changes at Carleton University, it is also the case that Carleton University also has its own set of institutional pressures and traditions which help shape the particular approaches used or programs developed. The Integrated Ph.D. Stream described below reflects therefore a particular institutional evolution within Carleton. Since the integrated stream involves very close collaboration between a large school and a large department, it is useful at the outset to keep in mind several basic facts about the two cooperating entities.

The School of Public Administration operates three basic programs. About 100 students are enrolled in an undergraduate honors degree program. But most of the courses in the undergraduate program are taught by faculty of the social science departments. In the M.A. program there are about 100 full-time students and 200 part-time students in the two year program. The school also offers a co-operative program with the School of International Affairs, an M.A. Development Administration stream involving about 40 full-time students drawn from a wide diversity of third world countries as well as Canadian students.

The School has a faculty complement of 40 full-time members drawn fairly evenly from backgrounds in political studies and economics, but including persons with academic backgrounds in law, management, sociology, and social psychology. In addition to covering the functional areas of subject matter, the combined faculty have extensive research experience in over 10 major policy fields. These include industrial, regional, macroeconomic, social, energy, corrections and justice, occupational and environmental, health care, labour relations, communications, and science and technology policies. The School also draws on faculty from other departments at Carleton and from the extensive managerial and policy expertise located in the national capital area.

The Department of Political Science at Carleton operates undergraduate, M.A. and doctoral programs. There are about 850 students in undergraduate honors study, 35 at the M.A. level, and 60 doctoral students. Its 40 faculty members bring a range of expertise and an extremely active research and publication record to a diverse range of political issues. Doctoral level study can be pursued in five fields -- comparative politics, international relations, political theory, Canadian politics, and public administration and public policy.

The development of the integrated stream reflected important research-based dynamics as well. For example, the school's research experience in producing its annual review of national budgets and priorities, How Ottawa Spends, now in its seventh year, influenced the content and structure of the Ph.D. initiative. The research involves several faculty in a process of annual collaboration that requires the meeting of quite rigid deadlines, and the need to communicate findings to a lay audience in a clear and economical way. Over the years, research on over 25 different departments and policy fields has been published. The work on How Ottawa Spends, also involves a wide network of personal research relationships, as opposed to jurisdictional relationships, with at least ten other Carleton faculty members in the departments of political science and economics. Many of these faculty are active in the new integrated stream and are far more prepared to enthusiastically identify themselves with the field of public policy and public administration than would have been the case a few years ago.

This experience also brought out the need, as one studied taxing and spending in diverse policy fields, for stronger interdisciplinary links to understand the micro political economy. By this I mean not just how economists think about the micro economy but also about just how much public policy analysts actually know about the practicalities of the micro political economy. Masters programs in public administration had given some recognition to this vital terrain and the new Integrated Stream at Carleton, as we see below, reflects an effort to build it in more firmly at the doctoral level both in teaching and research.

There were equally important dynamics within the Department of Political Science that also occurred in the mid-1980s to produce the collaborative stream. One of these developments was the broadening within the Canadian politics faculty at Carleton (which has always had considerable nationally recognized strength) to include research concerns about the political economy of the Canadian state. Not only did this energize the study of Canadian politics but it also readily lead to research on various parts of the administrative state by persons who would not otherwise have regarded themselves as being in the field of public administration and public policy. This kind of political economy was also more inherently comparative and thus bridges were built with faculty engaged in research on comparative politics and international relations.

In portraying these changes, I do not wish to convey that some kind of gushy harmonious synthesis has emerged. Strong views obviously exist across the disciplines as well as within the department and the school. But there is a sense in which it is true, at least in the Carleton context, that a sufficient consensus has been produced by these dynamics and crosscurrents to launch into a doctoral level educational enterprise which we think can contribute further to the development of the field.

Our overall view is that over the past decade at the doctoral level in Canada there has been little overt change in program content in the public administration field. Public administration and public policy were certainly being studied as a field at the doctoral level in political science departments, and individual faculty were certainly using the broad analytical and multi-disciplinary literature now available. But no program existed that could be said to have been explicitly structured to offer a full fledged opportunity for doctoral study in public administration and public policy. The Carleton initiative is also based on a desire to ensure that young scholars are educated to supply future teaching and research needs in the field.

KEY FEATURES OF THE INTEGRATED PHD STREAM IN PUBLIC ADMINISTRATION AND PUBLIC POLICY

The Integrated Stream at Carleton University reflects many of the intellectual dynamics and developments traced above. Using the combined resources of both the Department and the School, the integrated offering has the following key features:
Comparative and Canadian

Students are exposed to both Comparative and Canadian analysis in their major field. They examine individual policy fields across countries. These include, at a minimum, the political economy of macroeconomic, social, and industrial policies. In addition, they are required to take Comparative Politics and Canadian Politics as their two minor fields in the Ph.D. program.

Politics and Economics

While the integrated stream is a doctoral program in political science with the majority of courses taught by political scientists, economics is a key required part of the curriculum. Compulsory courses must be taken in advanced micro-economics for policy analysis and in cost-benefit analysis. (Prior to admission to the program, students also must have completed a basic micro-economics course.)

Policy, Organization and Implementation

The core courses and subsequent tutorial preparations for the comprehensive examinations require students to deal critically with the seamless web between policy, organization, and implementation that constitutes the real world of public policy and public administration. The study of theories of administration therefore include an understanding of concurrent administrative systems of comparative complex organizations (e.g., public agencies, private corporations, volunteer bodies.) of instrument choice, of the role of the courts and of comparative and Canadian public sector industrial relations.

Research and Teaching

The integrated stream is premised on the traditional goal of doctoral level programs, namely to produce high quality researchers and teachers. But, more than most existing Ph.D. programs, students will be given specific opportunities to develop teaching and communication skills and to obtain feedback on their performance in this area. These are essential skills as well for graduates who do not go on to teaching positions, since the clear communication of ideas and alternative verbally and in written form is vital in other employment settings as well.

A Structured Approach

In comparison with many other doctoral programs, students will find that the integrated stream is quite structured. The nature and rigour of the program require that there be a well defined core. While one optional course can be taken and while there is considerable scope for choice in the thesis topic and in faculty to work with, the core courses are quite numerous, and are all compulsory. Advanced standing will not be granted for any of them.

The Core Courses

The attached chart shows the core courses at a glance and thus gives a sense of the basic content of the entire program.
Québec: La démolition tranquille

Donald C. Savage
CAUT Executive Secretary

Republied with permission of CAUT.

Has Bill Bennett been reborn on the banks of the St. Lawrence?

This summer, after the Quebec National Assembly was prorogued, the Bourassa government released, during a period of six days, three dramatic reports on the future of Quebec written by prominent businessmen closely associated with the regime.

The first report was sponsored by Pierre Fortier, the minister responsible for privatization. It recommends sweeping privatization of government agencies. The second, headed by Reed Scowen, parliamentary assistant to the Premier, recommends deregulation. The third, headed by treasury board chief Paul Gobeil, studies administrative efficiency and recommends the regrouping, abolition or fusion of some 200 agencies.

In essence, the reports argue that the intervention of the Quebec state during the Quiet Revolution was necessary to defend the interests of the Quebecois. Now, however, with the development of a viable francophone presence in the private sector, this structure is no longer necessary.

Jacques Parizeau, the former Finance Minister of the Parti Quebecois, has stated that the reports are the most important since the Parent Commission revolutionized education 20 years ago.

The three committees charged with producing the reports were composed of businessmen and those who support their views. There were no representatives from other groups in Quebec society.

At first glance, it might seem that these reports have little to do with the universities. However, the Gobeil Report addressed education in general and universities in particular. Mr. Gobeil, it should be noted, wants to reduce the deficit to zero by 1990. His report has received by far the greatest play in the Quebec press.

The general thrust of the Gobeil Report's section on education is to encourage a free market, to impose quality from the top, and to increase the workload of all teachers and professors. At the primary and secondary school level, and eventually at the CEGEPS, this would involve adopting a system which would involve tripling the fees to discourage frivolous students while increasing the availability of loans and grants.

The report recommends that the workload of primary and secondary school teachers be increased by 15%, that the workload of CEGEP (similar to community colleges elsewhere in Canada) teachers be adjusted so that it is in line with that of secondary school teachers, and that the workload of university professors be increased to nine hours of teaching per week. This would save $135 million on the university budget by eliminating redundant professors.

Despite the enthusiasm of the authors for decentralization and deregulation, they recommend the creation of a provincial agency to control quality in education. At the university level, the report also recommends the abolition of the central agency of the Université du Quebec and the transformation of each campus into an autonomous institution.

Other changes would also touch the universities and their faculty. The authors of the Gobeil Report wish as much as possible to remove the province from cultural undertakings. The report proposes a slow death for Radio Quebec. It also proposes the transfer of many institutions such as museums to the municipalities. It recommends the abolition of virtually all consultative agencies, including those for universities and colleges, as well as those for science and technology, the arts, public libraries, research on forestry and on the environment, and the like. Some would be absorbed into existing ministries.

In the area of research and development, it recommends restructuring. Seven organizations involved in various areas of research would be abolished, as would a number of institutes. The report then proposes the creation of two new organizations, one to finance fundamental and applied research and the other research and development.

It demands the rationalization of health education and the abolition of one faculty of medicine, without suggesting which one.

Faculty members would be personally affected by the recommendation that the first $2,000 of health care be treated as a taxable benefit.

Finally, the Scowen Report would affect unionized faculty in the sense that the report favours diminishing the power of unions while enhancing that of management. In particular, it recommends far-reaching changes to diminish the effects of occupational health and safety legislation and to introduce "more flexible standards". It would also affect the ability of professional groups, such as lawyers to set minimum fees and to regulate advertising.

On the university front, FAPUQ immediately protested the total lack of consultation with the university community. CAUT supported this protest. Both student groups (RAEU and ANEC) opposed the proposal for dramatically increased fees.

François Tavenas, the Dean of the Faculty of Science and Engineering at Laval, replied to the recommendation on workload in Le Devoir (for full text, see Canadian Association of University Teachers Bulletin (CAUT), vol. 33, no. 7, 1986).

Dr. Tavenas observed that the Gobeil committee had a very narrow view of universities and had proposed a rudimentary analysis of workload. He pointed out that faculty/student ratios in Quebec were among the highest in Canada and that the number of university students has grown dramatically in recent years, while professorial posts have remained unchanged. Furthermore, it is suggested that the figure in Quebec in 1983/84 (the last available data) was 18:14 and was now certainly even higher. This compared with 9:13 in the major universities in the United States, 6:10 in Britain (despite the Thatcher cuts), and 6:8 in Japan. In his view, the proposals would reduce the quality of education, particularly in science and engineering, an area which demands a high faculty/student ratio.

Dr. Tavenas also pointed out that, while Quebec is at the forefront of the country in the registration of undergraduates, it has not done so at the graduate level. The reduction in the number of professors would inevitably cripple this area since it is highly labour intensive. He underlined the point that at Laval the university faculty attract large research grants and research had an important effect on the local economy. Cutbacks in faculty and increased teaching hours would mean fewer research contracts.

Finally, he stated that the analysis of the committee was a caricature. The criteria chosen ignored some of the essential work of the university, namely the creation of researchers and the development of knowledge. If the measures proposed were carried out, he said, the result would be to make Quebec incapable of meeting its needs in highly specialized manpower and the development of technology. He then went on to say that a Province of Quebec would have no chance of being competitive in world markets.

In a separate article in Le Devoir, Pierre Sormany pointed out one of the results of such proposals not noted by the press: the concentration of power in the hands of the ministers and senior bureaucrats. Certainly, if the recommendations were followed up, the scope of the state would be reduced. At the same time, however, the measures would lead to the abolition of virtually all consultative agencies such as those for universities and colleges, and the absorption of specialized agencies by existing ministries. The power of the regular civil service and that of the ministers would be immensely increased in the areas in which they continued to be involved. The consequences would be a more traditionally bureaucratic approach and, perhaps, a more political one as well.

University researchers, Mr. Sormany said, recall with horror the days when the program for research assistance was part of the higher education division of the Department of Education. Each research proposal had to go through 17 stages of approval, including that of the deputy minister.

Where does all this leave the parliamentary commission on higher education which will be starting its work this fall? Claude Ryan, the minister responsible, has been somewhat upstaged in his own domain. In addition to the three reports, there have been cuts to the university budgets and covert fee increases despite Liberal electoral promises to the contrary. Only time will tell whether the President of the Cordia University Students Association was correct in his reaction: "Why bother with the hearings now. It appears to have been decided." FAUQ will, nevertheless, be appearing before the Commission.

The reports also generated immediate and vigorous debate on the general theme of the role of the state in society. A First Cemetery slogan appeared immediately — "la démolition tranquille" — de l'état provisoire à l'état proviso (the President of the Treasury Board was formerly head of the proviso grocery chain). The Conseil du Patronat wanted more, particularly the effective dismantling of all health and safety regulations.

But the most vigorous attack from the Right came in a series of four articles in Le Devoir by Pierre Lemieux, the Director of the Institut économique de Paris à Montréal and author of Du Libéralisme à l'antichau-capitalisme. Mr. Lemieux characterized the reports as timid tinkering without a true philosophic basic grounded in neo-liberalism. The state, he argued, should only be involved in public provision such as the police, the courts and the military and, perhaps, assistance to the truly poor. All else should be left to the sovereign individual. The fundamental flaw of the reports was the failure to abolish such constants as liberty as environmental legislation, to limit the powers of trade unions and to end public control of health and education which are the most expensive functions of the provincial government. Bill 101 should be abolished. There is no such thing as "l'intérêt du Québec" but only the interests of individuals.

Jean-Paul l'Allier, a former Liberal cabinet minister, noted that the Gobeil Committee made recommendations concerning 300 structures and functions of government with, at most, 50 hours of work, i.e. ten minutes for each subject considered. In the editorial columns of Le Devoir, there were complaints that the policy had no principle, no reason and proof, and that in areas such as labour relations the reports were superficial and pretentious. The government needed to correct excesses, not lead a crusade.

Lise Bissonnette a former editor of Le Devoir and now a columnist and writer, responded to the reports in several scathing articles. The first, which is reprinted elsewhere in the CAUT Bulletin, suggested that the authors themselves were quick to use relatively free access to higher education and good jobs to create their reputations, which in turn has allowed them to secure well paid posts in the private sector. Now that they have arrived, they wish to slam the doors behind them. She suggested that the authors have learned the trick of subsuming the public interest with their own, in recommending, for instance, an advisory council on private education and increased state subsidies for private schools where they, of course, send their children. The authors, she said, have criticized the level of subsidies for agriculture but support the constraint on the free market involved in giving tax preference to Quebec shares — which has allowed among other things, Provigo to develop as it has.

In a second article devoted to the neoliberals such as Pierre Lemieux, she noted the tendency of the Quebec electorate to substitute secular religion for revealed ones. Philosophy becomes a doctrine to exclude all other thought; economics a catechism.

In a third article, Ms. Bissonnette pointed to the miserly contributions to culture given by Quebec companies such as
What is that political reality. The reports certainly would suggest that Mr. Bourassa has closer affinities to Brian Mulroney than to John Turner. The situation also leaves the Parti Québécois in an awkward position. Pierre-Marc Johnson has been trying to rebuid the PQ as a moderate conservative party. If the Liberals move massively to the Right, will the PQ have to rediscover social democracy? Mr. Bourassa will certainly recall that such was the route to power for the PQ in the 1970s.

Garnot Köhler (Research Centre, Sheridan college) is an active member of this association. He is, for instance, currently doing important work for the Board as a member for the Jack Committee on Membership. He has also agreed to undertake a survey to determine, as it expresses it, the high-tech pulse of our Association. These findings will be of interest both to the work of the Research Communications Committee but also in helping us to define ourselves and our needs to funding Councils and to government.

You will find, inserted in this 'Bulletin', an envelope containing a brief identifying questionnaire. We urge you to respond.

CALL FOR PAPERS ON 1837 REBELLION

The Centre of Canadian Studies, University of Edinburg, invites submissions for participation in a seminar to mark the 150th anniversary of the 1837 Rebellions. The Seminar will be held in Edinburg on May 8–10, 1987.

Scots played a major role in the events leading to the 1837 rebellions. Contributions are especially invited discussing the connections between contemporary issues in Scotland and British North America.

While the main focus of the seminar will obviously be historical, contributions are invited from such disciplines as economics, geography, law, literature and politics which may throw light on British North America in the Atlantic world in the time of the rebellions. There will be a combination of papers, both in plenary sessions and in workshops. Presentation of workshop papers will be limited to 30 minutes.
An excursion is planned to visit places associated with William Lyon Mackenzie, Robert Gourlay, John Strachan and Lord Elgin.

Proposals for papers, in English or French, accompanied by a summary of about 250 words, should be submitted to:

Conference Report

On October 9-11, 1986 an international 3 day workshop was held at Carleton University on the influence of the Realist and Neo-Realist paradigm on the Study and Practice of International Relations in Canada. It featured international relations specialists from England, West Germany and the United States, several scholars of international relations and Canadian foreign policy from across Canada, as well as officials from the Department of External Affairs and representatives of several NGO’s and interest groups with an interest in Canadian foreign policy. Organized by a group of senior graduate students in the Department of Political Science at Carleton University who were dissatisfied with the state of both international relations theory and the study and practice of Canadian foreign policy, the workshop explored the relationship between these two aspects of international reality and what research directions hold promise for making international relations and foreign policy study in Canada more self-critical and relevant to the needs of people rather than states. Of particular relevance to new research directions in international relations was a prolonged and provocative examination of political realism as a privileged discourse of power and domination, employed by statesmen and those who monitor them in the academy, as well as the role of the realist hegemony in excluding alternative discourses and claims for a different organization of international politics. The differing analyses and world-views of practitioners and academics was also very apparent in a sustained debate on the structural features which have given rise to the Canadian government's initiative to negotiate a free trade agreement with the U.S. The symposium also featured a session on the role of graduate studies in, and the nature of media presentations of, international politics in propagating and reinforcing a technocratic and power politics view of the world in the public both within and beyond Canada. The proceedings of the workshop will be published by Carleton University Press and plans are underway for a course reader on international relations incorporating the themes and critiques which emerged at the symposium. Anyone wishing further information on the symposium or the ongoing project is invited to contact Gregg Legare, Department of Political Science, Carleton University, Ottawa, Ont., K1S 5B6.

The Institut de recherche at the Faculté Saint-Jean, University of Alberta, signed an agreement with the Société historique hérédité francophone et albertin establishing the framework for future joint ventures. The Société et et the Institut have a common aim:
to foster research on the Franco-Albertan community in order to attain a better understanding of its evolution.

The Institut and the Société agreed to undertake several joint projects. Two projects currently under discussion are an inventory of archives related to the French-speaking community and an index of La Savane, a French weekly published in Edmonton since 1928. The Institut and the Société plan to produce basic research tools, including data bases to house, sort and retrieve information on the Franco-Albertan community.

The Société is located in St. Paul, Alberta. Over the last seven years, it has accumulated an important collection of audio-

SASKATCHEWAN PROFESSOR WINS PRESTIGIOUS AWARD

Professor John Courtney, University of Saskatchewan, is one of five scholars to receive a prestigious Canadian Studies
Writing Award from the Secretary of State.
The awards, each worth $10,000, support research and writing for the preparation of textbooks. Professor Courtney, who is with the Department of Political Science, University of Saskatchewan, is writing a book to be entitled Party Conventions and Canadian Political Leadership. He will use the award while on sabbatical leave as a visiting scholar at the Center for International Affairs, Harvard University.

In 1973, Professor Courtney completed a book on leadership selection in Canada.
Since then, four major party leadership conventions have been held and the dynamics of national conventions have changed markedly. A key element in this change has been the media, particularly telephone, which has come to play an increasingly larger role in leadership selection. This role, which has not been fully examined, is one of the features of leadership selection that Professor Courtney intends to scrutinize.

The book will be written with undergraduate students and informed non-university readers in mind.

Professor Courtney may be contacted at the University of Saskatchewan,
Saskatoon, Saskatchewan S7N 0W0,
(306) 966-5206.

Professor Richard W. Leech of the Department of History has been awarded a grant of $3,600 by the National Endowment of Canada for a study of the role and influence of British emigration to Canada in the 19th century.

RAY CHARRON - Concordia University Fellowship

ROBERT COLLINS - Concordia University Fellowship
John R. Williams

John R. Williams, educator and administrator at West Virginia University, died March 26, 1986 following a short illness. He was 66.

Dr. Williams was born in Detroit, Michigan on November 21, 1919, the son of the late Ralph Hill Williams and Myrtle Ryan Williams. Williams earned an Arts Bachelor degree from Lawrence College in 1944, a Master of Arts degree from Johns Hopkins in 1947, and a Doctorate of Philosophy from Duke University in 1951.

Williams had been associated with West Virginia University since 1949. He served as chairman of the Political Science Department from 1961 to 1972. Under his leadership the faculty of that department doubled, the number of Political Science majors quadrupled, and a Doctorate Program and a Master of Public Administration Program were established. In 1973 Williams was appointed Coordinator of the University's Honors Program and supervised that Program's transformation from a special program into an academic program of merit for superior students. He was an architect of the West Virginia University Faculty Constitution.

Williams studied extensively overseas. He was a Baynes Fellow at the London School of Economics and Political Science in 1951-52, and returned there as an Academic Visitor in 1972. He was the recipient of the Fulbright Research Fellowship which was taken at the Australian National University in Canberra, Australia in 1958-60.

Dr. Williams was a member of the American Political Science Association, West Virginia Political Science Association (Vice-Pres. 1967-68, Pres. 1968-69), the Canadian Political Science Association, Australasian Political Studies Association, Australian Institute of Political Science, the Conservative and Unionist Association, Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Sigma Alpha, and Delta Tau Delta. He was the author of The Conservative Party of Canada, 1920-1949, and John Latham and the Conservative Recovery from Defeat as well as various articles appearing in newspapers and scholarly publications.

Dr. Williams was honored many times for excellence in teaching. In the centennial year of the University's existence, he was named one of six outstanding faculty members. In 1984 he was honored by the Golden Key National Honor Society as an outstanding faculty member. In 1985 Williams was again selected as an outstanding teacher of the University.

Indeed, the hallmark of Williams' tenure at West Virginia University was his devotion to, and pride in, his students. He often expressed the wish that the West Virginia University was attended by as bright and capable students as any other institution in the country. He instructed and advised 7 Rhodes Scholars from West Virginia University. Fittingly, the Political Science Department's annual award to the most outstanding undergraduate student was named after him in 1972. He served on the University's selection committees for the Rhodes, Marshall and Truman Scholarships.

Dr. Williams is survived by his wife Madeleine, his two sons Jacques and Mark, and two grand-daughters. His sister Mary Urban resides in Clarendon Hills, Ill.
