PLENARY SESSION: RECONSTRUCTING CITIZENSHIP
ROOM/PIÈCE: PF162

The concept of citizenship is deeply implicated in any discussion about the relation between individuals and communities and between communities and the state. The three speakers in this year's plenary session are noted participants in debates regarding how citizenship should be (re)constructed. Their work revolves around characterizing the dimensions of citizenship and determining whether citizenship can encompass different obligations and responsibilities for different members of the state. The role and meaning of self-determination, its cultural- and gender-specific dimensions, are central to the examination of this concept.
